

FUNERAL IS HELD FOR I. L. CLARK

Thirty-two close friends, most of them officers of the church, carry floral pieces as they precede the hearse to the Sixth Ward Chapel—Tribute Paid to the Memory of Ogden Business Man.

Church officers from the wards of Weber county and elsewhere, representative business men, employees, old customers and relatives of Isaac L. Clark, a pioneer business man of Ogden, attended the funeral services held for him at the Sixth ward chapel this afternoon. Among those who paid impressive tributes to his character were men who had been life-long friends, were associated with him in the business world or served with him in duties for his church or his city and state. The musical numbers were those known to have been favorites with him.

Before the casket was removed from the home, numerous friends and relatives visited the residence to see I. L. Clark's body for the last time. The room in which the body lay in state contained many beautiful floral tributes from representative business houses, members of the family, various church organizations and friends. When it came time to go to the chapel for the services, thirty-two friends of Mr. Clark, most of them officers of the church, carried one or two of the floral designs to the sidewalk. After the brief services at the home were held, the flower bearers, followed by the intimate friends and relatives, preceded the hearse to the chapel at Twenty-third street and Madison avenue. The pall bearers, all old friends and business acquaintances of Mr. Clark, were: A. T. Wright, H. C. Tavey, O. B. Gilson, J. H. F. Last, B. H. Goddard, Thomas Burt, Arthur Kuhn and John Hurst. At the chapel, the flowers were arranged near the front of the auditorium, making a beautiful bower where-in was placed the casket. Upon the rostrum were the officers of the Ogden stake and the churchmen from the various wards of the county and state.

Bishop O. M. Sanderson of the Sixth ward conducted the funeral services. Those who paid tributes of respect to the deceased were President John Watson, Rev. P. A. Simpson of Salt Lake, President Thomas B. Evans, Samuel G. Dye and Bishop Sanderson. Musical numbers were given by George Douglas, who sang "Hope Beyond the Shadow"; Miss Elsie Shorten who sang "My Faith in Thee"; Walter Stephens, Mrs. Mary Farley and the Sixth ward quartette. John Watson served as a member of the city council during the same years that I. L. Clark represented the Fourth ward. Mr. Watson also became connected with the Zion's Co-operative Mercantile Institute one year before Mr. Clark first entered the mercantile field. The speakers' remarks dealt with his early associations with Mr. Clark and also with incidents connected with the serving of both on committees of the city council.

President Thomas B. Evans is president of the Ogden stake and was directly connected in church work with Mr. Clark who was a member of the high council of that stake. President Evans spoke of the exceptionally strong character of the late councillor and illustrated his points with incidents that had come to his attention since the deceased became a high councillor four years ago. The speaker declared that Mr. Clark's COUNTRY STYLE DINNER. The home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Guthrie on 17th street was the scene of a very enjoyable affair not long ago, when the members of Clara Barton division were bidden to make merry and partake of a genuine country style dinner with fresh vegetables grown by the host, fruits a plenty, sweet milk, buttermilk and the good old "Dutch cheese like mother used to make down on the farm." The good old-fashioned games, too, were a feature of the entertainment—drop the handkerchief, ring around the rosy, etc., etc., and just like "kids," they had to be told what time to go home or walk from 17th to town.

WALL STREET. New York, Aug. 29.—Speculators who were disposed to continue operations on the long side were aided in their efforts by improvement in commission house business. This demand was especially noticeable in the broader market for numerous specialties which are not often dealt in.

While stocks showed a hesitating tone at times, there was no serious interruption to progress upward during the morning and traders who attempted to depress the market found it too strong for them. The rise was accelerated by orders from traders who finally went into the market after holding for a time in hope of a reaction. Short covering continued to play an important part in the rise, but there was enough buying for the long account to give more confidence in the speculative position of the market. Bonds were steady.

Opening transactions in the leading stocks were on a large scale today, but the market lacked the strong tone which characterized it yesterday. The most active issue was Steel, transactions in which amounted to about 10,000 shares in the first few minutes. The price advanced a small fraction, as did the quotations for Reading and Amalgamated, which also were active. Union Pacific was under some pressure and receded a fraction; American Snuff rose four points.

A vigorous buying movement was started in smelting, which sent it up 2 1/2 and stopped the general decline. Other stocks crept up again to near the previous high point, but the demand was not maintained and speculation lapsed into a rut. Toledo, St. Louis and Western 4's lost their early advance of five points.

Profit-taking combined with displays of weakness at various points caused the whole market to slide off in the early afternoon. Missouri Pacific was notably weak, falling 1 1/2 under yesterday's close. St. Paul and New York Central also showed unmistakable heaviness.

The market closed easy. After some slight irregularity prices turned definitely downward, with activity and weakness increasing in the last few minutes. Previous gains were mostly lost and there was a good sprinkling of losses. American Ice fell 2 and Wells-Fargo Express 3 points.

EXTENDING ACQUAINTANCE WITH AFRICA.

A range of volcanic mountains in Africa, in a land where the natives actually smelted, was suggested as the possible origin of the old legends of the course of the Nile by Captain E. M. Jack, R. E., at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society.

Captain Jack was a member of the Anglo-German-Belgian Mountain commission, and the mountains he referred to are the Mufumbiro mountains, which are situated in a part of Africa where three empires meet—the British, the German and the Belgian frontiers of these three powers joining each other on the rocky and inaccessible summit of Mount Saniho.

The great volcanic range of Mufumbiro was one of the most striking physical features in Africa, he said, and had a historical romantic interest in that it might possibly be the origin of the old legends of the sources of the Nile. They all knew the story of the Nile; how its fountains were said to rise in the Mountains of the Moon and to flow into some great lakes, and then to form one river. Since the discovery of Ruwenzori the tendency had been to look on it as the origin of the legend; but he thought that these volcanoes had at least an equal claim to be considered.

They were famed for miles around, as their name implied, as "the place where there is fire," the mountains that belched forth flame and smoke. These mountains had a profound effect on the native mind and gave rise to many legends. One of these was that Gongo, a demon who inhabited the range, cut off the head of his wife, represented by the mountain Nina Gongo, ("the wife of Gongo"), and threw it into Lake Kivu.

The region was covered almost entirely by a sheet of lava which stretched like a sea as far as the mountains of Ruwenzori. It had decomposed to a large extent into soil of great fertility, which was closely cultivated by the natives. This lava was honeycombed with holes and caverns which rang hollow under one's feet, and into which probably a great deal of the surface water percolated, accounting for the absence of streams. These caves were put to various uses. One of them was found to be a burying place, bodies being brought on bladders and left there. Another formed a water reservoir, to which cattle were brought from many miles distant in times of drought. Many were used as places of hiding and refuge for men and beasts when alarmed or during raids. Describing the series of beautiful lakes to be found in the region, Captain Jack said a peculiarity of these lakes was that none of them contained any fish.

As a striking contrast to this was a small lake near Busuenda, near Mount Miken, which was so full of fish that the water seemed to be alive with them. Kivu was held by most travelers who had seen fit to be the most beautiful lake in Africa. A curious phenomenon occurred occasionally on Lake Kivu. At the time when there was no wind the surface of the lake would become violently agitated, and the water was found after such agitation to be full of sediment. This disturbance was caused, presumably, by some submarine volcanic movement.

The religion of the people of the district took the form of Lubare or Nabinawa worship. Lubare was the common worship of Bugana, and was the belief in a spirit living in some selected object, such as a tree or a stone, or very commonly in a python. In the latter case the snake was enlaced with milk and food to remain near the village to its worshipers. Nabinawa was a female spirit who dwelt underground, but often appeared among human beings, rapidly assuming various personalities, such as a child or an old woman, but always feminine. The spirit was usually malignant and caused death, illness, etc.

There was also a belief among these natives in the return of the spirit after death. Minature huts, with food placed inside, were frequently seen outside the natives' huts, and these were said to be for the spirits of the departed.

YUAN SHI KAI'S POSITION IN CHINA. As for the immediate future, and the prospect of an early return to normal conditions in China, everything would appear to depend upon Yuan's possessing the courage to face the storm, the means to quell it, and the good fortune to escape assassination. The situation, on the whole, is favorable to his cause. The merchants and gentry of the central provinces, from whom alone money can be drawn, have shown themselves unmistakably disposed to support his policy; they are weary of political strife, and evidently unwilling to contribute further funds to Young China's war chest. The recent loan has placed Yuan in a position to command the allegiance for the time being, of the troops, with whom the prospect of liberal and regular pay outweighs all other considerations. The physique, equipment and morale of the northern forces, drawn chiefly from Ghanung and Honan, are greatly superior to those of the south, and they are better led. Finally, the country as a whole is aware of the fact that the foreign powers have put their money upon Yuan, and that, if intervention should become necessary for the protection of foreign interests, they are unlikely to show much sympathy for a revolutionary movement which has so far proved itself hopelessly lacking in constructive intelligence.

If Yuan has the courage of his convictions and overcomes the tendency to compromise which always appeals powerfully to the mandarin mind at a dangerous crisis, if he can persuade his colleagues and supporters at Peking and in the provinces to unite in a determined policy for the suppression of this insurrection, the present crisis may well prove beneficial to China's best interests, leading to the restoration of law and order and to recognition of the central government's traditional authority in the provinces. Given one or two initial successes, it is safe to predict that the rebel armies will speedily melt away. At present such public opinion as exists in the central provinces is evidently hesitating, fearful of declaring itself openly for either side, terrorized at the prospect of reprisals and exactions to come.

VOTE REFORM IN PRUSSIA. Encouraged by the example of the Belgians, some of the Prussian Socialists are once more agitating a general strike to bring about the reforms in the electoral machinery. In particular, they want to abolish the obnoxious three-class system of voting, which even Bismarck, in a moment of irritation, allowed himself to denounce as the most absurd that had ever been promulgated in any country. Devised to give the semblance of manhood suffrage while maintaining unimpaired the complete dominance of the landed aristocracy, the three-class system has been a stumbling block in the way of democratic progress. The fact that no rearrangements of election districts has taken place in Prussia since 1890 is a further irritant, since it works, together with the three-class system, to deprive the industrial masses and the lower middle classes in the rapidly growing cities of anything like adequate representation.

The government offered to make certain concessions in 1910, but the proposed modifications of the three-class system were declared by the Social Democrats, the Liberals and the Poles to be farcical; the Social Democrats stand for universal, direct and equal suffrage, with proportional representation. The Kaiser is quite as firmly committed to the status quo, since any restricting would inevitably have the effect of increasing the power of the Socialists, who elected 110 out of the 397 representatives in the Reichstag in 1912 and came within a few votes of electing a representative in the palace district of Berlin. —Chicago Record-Herald.

VICISSITUDES OF ENGLISH TITLES. The succession of the Sackville barony will still be out of the direct line, apparently. The late Lord Sackville did not leave a son to succeed him, and the present Lord Sackville's only child is the Hon. Victoria Sackville-West, who has played such a prominent part in the recent "million will" proceedings. Miss Sackville-West can hardly remain at Knole like her mother did by marrying her cousin, the heir-presumptive, for the heir-presumptive now is Miss Sackville's Uncle, Major the Hon. Charles John Sackville-West, and his eldest son, her cousin, is but a little boy. And this is leaving out of account altogether Miss Sackville-West's own inclinations, rumor having it that she will soon be engaged to Harold Nicolson, a young diplomat of great promise attached to the Russian Embassy at St. Petersburg. It is remarkable how the De La Warrs, the Sackvilles and the Wests have intermingled in the effort to save their lines from extinction. First of all, the West barony became merged with that of the De La Warrs by marriage, but both lines fell into abeyance in 1554. The abeyance was never formally pronounced, however, and in 1552 Sir William West, a nephew of the last of the Barons West, became Baron De La Warr. The Barons De La Warr were made earls in 1707. Then the line took in the name of Sackville in 1843, when the Duke of Dorset becoming extinct the fifth Earl de la Warr, who had married Lady Elizabeth Sackville, daughter of the last Duke of Dorset, changed his family name to Sackville-West line. The West portion of the family name of the Earls de la Warr was dropped by the seventh Earl, and the family name of the earldom now stands simply as Sackville. The name Sackville-West however, was continued when the Sackville Barony was created in 1876, the first Baron being the fourth son of the Lady Elizabeth Sackville above mentioned, who took with him as his heritage Knole House.
